Jacob's Ladder: Paradise Regained Michele Longo O'Donnell

In the fall of 1962 I had an undeniable spiritual experience granting me the certainty of a world without disease. The vision consumed my heart and my life and has “ordered my steps” ever since. I could have never imagined where it would take me; perhaps the discovery of a new pill, or whatever... But no! This all consuming factor that took such hold of my life placed me on a path of fervent pursuit of an understanding of the true nature of God. How could I have known that human suffering was directly connected to our misapprehension of both the nature of God and our connection to that? How could I have possibly guessed that we were only experiencing according to what we believed, imagined about the nature of our creator, our eternal source? This is the 8th book I have written progressively climbing the ladder of wisdom, knowledge and understanding. To do this it was imperative to let go of the worn out theology of God as the cause of human suffering...vindictive, stern, exacting, and punitive...causing us to live with the expectation, the fearful looking for, evil to appear. We deny believing this...but we do. All certainty of a life lived out from under the cruel law of chance, one of pure goodness, joy and abundance, with not even a thought of evil, has been utterly swallowed up until it became absurd to ever think of such. And now finally our long night is over. We have reached the living experience of the inexpressible, blazing glory of pure goodness, filling all of creation and bringing it out from under its dark and long winter. I welcome you, as you read these pages, to paradise regained.
