Remember the fable about a goose that laid golden eggs? It goes something like this: A farmer and his wife owned a goose that laid golden eggs – one each day. They prospered and were very happy. Life was good. However, as it sometimes happens, their satisfaction turned to greed. They were no longer happy with a single golden egg each day. They decided if they killed the Golden Goose they would find, inside the poor creature, an unlimited supply of gold. Of course when they killed the goose they didn't find any gold and had no more golden eggs. In a way, our taxpayer may be like the luckless Golden Goose. Taxpayers pay and pay only to find it's never enough. However there is an important difference between the taxpayer and the fabled Golden Goose. The taxpayer has options. This book explores some of those options.
